IBD & new ways of working post-COVID: Telemedicine & virtual clinics

November 18, 2021, 18:30 – 19:30 CET

We've got free, top-tier content on IBD for you!

It's live and right around the corner so register now for next Thursday's free webinar, "IBD & new ways of working post-COVID: Telemedicine & virtual clinics"!

On November 18, make sure to join peers online for the full hour from 18:30 – 19:30 CET to ask your questions directly to our international experts, Paul Harrow and Mette Bennedsen, as well as our moderator, Roger Leicester.

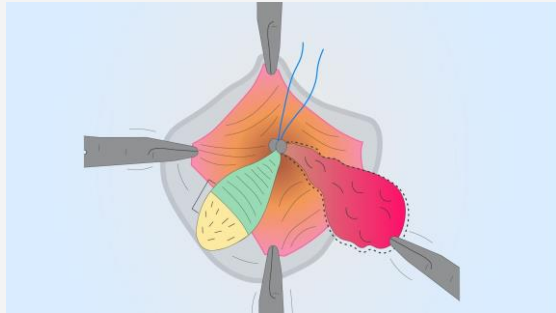

This webinar will outline two services for remote IBD patient monitoring in the UK and Denmark as a starting point for participants to relate these experiences to their particular clinical settings and centres. Aspects such as the importance of trusting patient-reported data, implementation steps, provider options and how to deal with digital exclusion or non-compliance will be covered.

What's in store? Education galore!

Check out our 2 new proctology online courses:

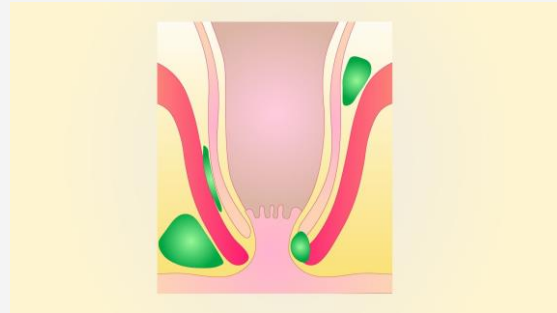

Proctology — haemorrhoids & perianal skin conditions

Proctologic disorders are a widespread problem—their high incidence means that many different healthcare professionals (e.g. gastroenterologists, surgeons, dermatologists, nurses, young residents, etc.) will be confronted by patients complaining about a proctologic disease.

This course by experts Harald Rosen, Janindra Warusavitarne and Nuha Yassin provides the most recent state-of-the-art information on the common proctologic disorders of haemorrhoids and perianal skin conditions.

Proctology — anatomy, anal fissure & anal abscess & fistula

This thrilling course will allow individuals to become familiar with:

- The anatomy of the pelvic floor responsible for the physiology of the anal and low rectal region
- The aetiology and risk factors for the development of anal fissures, their classification, symptoms and diagnosis, and the main concepts of medical and surgical treatment — learners should be able to diagnose and recommend the best treatment approach for anal fissure
- The pathophysiology and classification of anal abscess and anal fissure, as well as the therapeutic options to treat these disorders

Hot off the digi-press!

Why not learn from the mistakes of our experts?

You can now freely access our Mistakes in... 2021 Digi-Book, containing every article from the year to date! Tap into the experience of our experts and learn what to avoid in research, diagnosis and treatment of digestive disease.

It also contains our latest instalment in the series, Mistakes in coagulation in liver disease and how to avoid them!

There authors discuss patient management in light of advances in our understanding, which indicate that, rather than being "anticoagulated", anti- and procoagulant tendencies are still balanced, though less robustly than in healthy individuals.

Ingest the best with our nutritious new online course!

Check out our latest online course, enteral nutrition. This course provides in-depth coverage of all aspects of enteral nutrition. Authors Željko Krznarić and Darija Vranešić Bender begin with a reminder of gastrointestinal tract physiology before discussing nutritional status and malnutrition, and nutritional assessment. They then consider enteral nutrition itself, including formula composition, and enteral tube feeding, looking at routes, techniques, devices and complications. They conclude with ethical considerations, aided by a real-life clinical case.
