Awareness for the gut microbiome

May marks Digestive Health Month, a month-long awareness campaign carried out in recognition of WGO's World Digestive Health Day (WDHD) celebrated on May 29. Promoting a different digestive health topic every year, the theme of WDHD 2020 is "The Gut Microbiome".

UEG takes a position

As we are currently facing a pandemic with far-reaching consequences for public health, we have issued a Position Paper on COVID-19 and Digestive Health. The paper highlights the current information on the COVID-19 implications for the management of digestive health conditions and provides recommendations for decision-makers and interest groups.

GI symptoms in COVID-19 patients

Participate in this European, prospective multicentre study and contribute to the characterisation of GI symptoms in COVID-19 patients. This helps to better define the clinical features of the infection, to assess the predictive value of GI symptoms as alarm signals in COVID-19 cases and to investigate the long-term consequences of the infection on the gastrointestinal tract.
